

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

5.1 Conclusion

In this thesis, researcher analysis the data of Warm Bodies Novel by Isaac Marion, which is a case that discusses the types of psychogenic needs experienced by unique young undead to understand meaning of life. The researcher is applying the theory Psychogenic y Henry Murray. The researcher found forms needs of affection data in this analysis.

First, the need for affiliation is the beginning of the part to be human which is forming friendships, groups, or intimate relationships. Found 7 data in the form of needs of affiliation, shown as the main character as an undead who has fulfilled the need of affiliation by having a friend, living together to work together, hunting groups to get food and women by his side as intimate relationships in love.

Second, the need of nurturance which is the need to give attention, protection, affection, calmness, sympathy and empathy. Found 7 data in the form of need of nurturance, shown from the attitude and emotion of the main character which provides protection for the woman he likes when attacked by a group of undead and from the way he sympathizes, feels sadness and then calms the woman with soothing words.

Third, the need of succorance is the need for protection, to get sympathy from others, to be supported, to be loved, to stay close to friends, or to be guided. Found 8 data in the form of need of succorance, shown from friendship or love relationships that have been formed by the main character. When the main character finds himself left behind by the woman he loves, his friends come to cheer him on. It is also shown where the woman by his side provides support to live life even though the world is in difficult circumstances.

Fourth, The Struggle to Fulfill Psychogenic Needs. The way R as the main character overcoming struggles in the form of having groups, killing others and the aspect of being human was found in 6 data.

5.2 Suggestion

After the researcher concluding the analysis, there are suggestions for the reader which can help next reader. For the reader, Warm Bodies novel recommends to reader which likes case needs of affection with another point of view through the wishes of the undead who want to become human again. which can help other researchers to find out the forms of Psychogenic needs of affection for the undead in Warm Bodies then better understand and think for a moment the meaning of humanity.