

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

5.1. Conclusion

After conducted the research it can be concluded that there are eight moral values that found from the novel regarding about value of being and value of giving. Values of being include honesty, courage, peaceability, and the last self-reliance and potential. While the value of giving include loyalty and dependability, love, unselfishness and sensitivity, kindness and friendliness and the last justice and mercy. It is also contained some moral philosophical points from the novel. All of the values are represented throughout the story by the main character, Edmond Dantes. Started from the start of the story when he yet a mere sailor, and after he becoming the Count of Monte Cristo. Engulfed with hatred did not made Edmond Dantes forgetting himself as a human being. With the vengeful character he still has the compassion and sympathy towards others, moreover to those who are oppressed, poor, and being treated unjustly. Those traits then guide him to do many kinds of valuable and incredible moral actions.

5.2. Suggestion

Based on the result of the research above, the researcher can guided the researcher to make suggestion. Frist suggestion is for literature student, to make better research using a moral philosophical approach; literary students should pay attention to moral philosophical approach, especially in moral values. The researchers hope that this analysis is useful for students especially the language and literature in understanding the moral philosophical approach. And the second, by analyzing the moral values in this novel, researcher can apply it in everyday life and establish a good relationship with social life.
