

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

5.1 Conclusion

Since speaker and hearer occasionally fail to recognize this and flout the cooperative principle, the knowledge of the cooperative principle makes speaker and hearer more understandable. For this reason, based on the research analysis and findings, the researcher draws a conclusion that responds to the study's objectives. The researcher is able to determine the type of flouting maxim and the reason why the guests flout the maxim. The talk show contains 4 flouting maxims. The most most dominant is flouting maxim of quantity. Because of flouting maxims quantity are dominant, the reason of flouting equals to the types. The most dominant is that all of the guests on James Corden's live talk show want to elaborate and elaborate on the question. Because sometimes they wanted people to know and understand more about the conversations they had. From all the explanations and findings, we can conclude that in order to have a conversation as listeners, we need to understand each other's intended meaning.

5.2 Suggestion

Based on the result of the data analysis and conclusion, the writer proposes some suggestions as follows:

1. The researcher hopes that the reader, whether a student or an ordinary person, will think twice before speaking to one another because miscommunication always occurs. However, the researcher emphasizes that the most important thing is to be courteous and avoid using language that might offend others.

2. This thesis is the outcome of analysis and research on the topic of analysis of flouting maxims as a way to improve and enrich people's knowledge. As a result, this thesis hoped to become a contribution, particularly for all people, to help them become better speakers and listeners who must create conversations without any insulting language and who they are speaking to.
3. The following researcher might be able to evaluate various genres. If researchers examine a novel, movie, or script that has been planned and written by the director or the writer, they should be able to identify novel patterns that are more diverse than those found in different types of talk shows or be able to directly speak with speakers.
4. It is important for readers who are students or regular people to think carefully about what they say to one another because miscommunication always occurs. The key is to be polite and avoid using language that might offend others.
