

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

This is the last chapter of this research, there are two parts in this section. The first section contains a conclusion from the researcher based on the results that have been discussed in the previous chapter. The second section contains suggestions and recommendations from the researcher for further researchers.

5.1. CONCLUSIONS

After conducting the analysis of euphemisms in the movie "A Passage to India," several significant insights were uncovered regarding the types and functions of euphemisms and their impact on social interactions and cultural representations. The conclusions of the research are as follows:

Types of Euphemisms: Euphemisms in the movie are categorized into several types, including those related to taboos, courtesy, politics, and professions. These euphemisms are used to address sensitive topics in a polished and nuanced manner, avoiding direct confrontation and maintaining social decorum. Function of Euphemisms: Euphemisms serve multiple functions in the movie, such as protective, underhand, uplifting, provocative, cohesive, and ludic. The phrase acknowledges the positive qualities of the Indian people, referring to them as being "full of all the virtues," which initially appears complimentary.

5.2. RECOMMENDATIONS

Based on the findings and conclusions, the following suggestions are proposed:

For Educators and Students: Incorporate the study of euphemisms into language and literature curricula to enhance linguistic awareness and critical thinking skills. Analyzing euphemisms can help students understand the subtleties of language and its role in shaping social interactions. For Future Researchers: Expand the scope of euphemism analysis to include different literary works, genres, and cultural contexts. Interdisciplinary approaches combining sociolinguistics with anthropology, history, and psychology can provide richer insights into the use and impact of euphemisms. For Policy and Communication Strategists: Be aware of the power of euphemisms in shaping public perception and discourse. Use euphemisms strategically to frame policies and messages in ways that are more acceptable to the public while ensuring transparency and ethical communication.
