

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

5.1 Conclusion

After analyzing the novel "Divergent", the researcher draws the conclusion that woman's struggle starts from a will from within herself. Besides that, intellectual abilities accompanied by education will help women enter the public space to be able to experiment in achieving independence. The struggle of women and Tris in the novel Divergent shows that intelligence is one of the things used in their struggle in the public space.

The struggle of women in the novel "Divergent" also requires independence that is able to maintain self-esteem, and is able to make people see us fully and deserve to be leaders. In addition, to achieve independence without factional differences, there are also several obstacles. Society's point of view makes it difficult for women to move into the public sphere. The viewpoint of society has been determined based on its faction and the cultural norms associated therein.

Tris' greatest obstacle was facing fear, the greatest thing to determine for her life and how to overcome it. Within self-fear also plays an important role. Fear to fight yourself in survival makes Tris believe that fear will bring havoc that will make someone die. Every now and then fear haunts Tris and he must fight it in order to get independence.

5.2 Suggestion

After conducting research on the analysis of woman struggle, the researcher realized that this research was far from perfect. This research still needs some suggestion from readers to develop research about this literary specifically. The researcher also needs constructive input for further research so that it becomes the next good work of research.

1. The researcher hope next research will be explored more deeply about literary work. The concept of theory that the researcher uses to analyze this research is a theory of Simone De Beauvoir using a feminist approach. Many inputs are needed by researchers in literary development to analyze the novel "Divergent" both from the aspect of element of faction analysis. Besides that, the analysis uses a different approach.
2. Researchers also hope that this research can help readers in the academic field to increase their knowledge. This research is recommended to be read by researchers or students who are happy with literature and can use this research as a reference for writing. Researcher also hopes that this research can help readers increase their knowledge of the novel "Divergent" by Veronica Roth and take a moral message from the story.
