

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

5.1 Conclusion

Based on the analysis described in Chapter IV, there are several forms of racism that affect the life of the main character in the novel. Starting from the name Nigger refers to the black slave in Mrs. Watson's house. Then there was a sale and purchased of slaves to the mastery of slaves by their master. Jim as the main character who got these acts of racism got support from another main character, Huck. Jim and Huck were two different humans according to social class in 19th century America. Jim was one of the black descents while Huck was of white ancestry. But here, Huck described to help Jim's struggle to get out of his torturous slavery. They both work together to get out of the city and seek their freedoms. Some of their struggles to get out of slavery were like running away from his master's house. Then Huck's support was lying to every citizen they met. Huck bragged a lot in order to save Jim and his fate. They also hide a lot so that they didn't find out. Hide in caves, in forests and in the sea.

Jim experienced racism acts from other characters because Jim was a black. Some of the acts such as became a slave, colonialized by his master Mrs. Watson, Jim would sell by Mrs. Watson to another island at the price of $800. Along the journey, Jim hid from the community, because if the community saw Jim as a runaway slave, Jim would be arrested and returned to his master. The whites colonized Jim in a way that they wanted to make him a slave forever. Therefore, Jim was looked for and returned to his master.

5.2 Suggestion

After analyzing the forms of racism and the struggle to get out of racism in the novel The Adventure of Huckleberry Fin by Mark Twain, the researcher would like to give some suggestion:

1. The upcoming researcher should understand the whole story in the novel. It is important to get better understanding in the analyzing process. The forms of racism that occur between the main character and the other characters in the novel must be considered in analyzing the relationship among all the characters in the novel story.
2. Researcher expects the other students can analyze the form of racism and the form of struggle against racism in the latest literary works such as novels and short stories.
3. Researchers also hopes that this thesis will be one of sources for literature student who take racism as their topic of undergraduate thesis.
